

European Journal of Social Work

Call for Papers

WRITING FOR THE JOURNAL

The European Journal of Social Work provides an international forum for the social professions, in which diverse and developing traditions in the discipline and practice of social work can be shared, compared and celebrated. It analyses and promotes, in a critical, informed and independent manner, European and international developments in social work, social policy, social service institutions, and strategies for social change. Recognising positively the diversity of cultural and conceptual traditions in which the social professions are grounded, it explores their specific competence in promoting practice based on justice and the recognition of human rights. The editorial board welcomes high quality contributions dealing with local, national, European, or international issues which advance this discourse.

Contributors may submit to a range of sections in the journal:

- Full academic papers (5,000 – 7,000 words) may be drawn from either theoretical or empirical work and are subject to peer review.
- Country Perspectives (1,500 words) take the form of short reflective pieces on social work within specific national contexts, or national/international conference reports.
- Research Notes (1,500 words) comprise summary findings from research studies and doctoral dissertations, or accounts of work in progress and methodological debate.
- Reviews are carried on a wide range of publications.

The journal publishes four issues a year, and accepted papers awaiting publication are published using iFirst, Taylor & Francis' proprietary system for publishing journal articles online almost immediately after author proofs have been corrected, so making new knowledge available to the research community in the shortest possible time.

SPECIAL ISSUE CALL FOR PAPERS: "Social Work, Older People and Migration"

Closing date for submission of abstracts, 15th May 2009

This special issue aims to profile migration as a driver for social change, offering the opportunity for new forms of intergenerational social solidarity that can adapt and support people in later life. It aims to increase social workers' awareness of the challenges and opportunities that migration poses with regard to theory, practice and policy development.
